COUxE EVALUATIONS

Student evaluations for next year can be completed by June 1 to assist with the student affairs of Glendon. If you have a problem or concern, please make an appointment with the Director of Student Affairs.

PERSONAL/ANNOUNCEMENTS

OFF-CAMPUS HOUSING

Students now in need of off-campus housing in the fall are invited to register now with SHARING, a non-profit service which helps older people find compatible partners for shared accommodation. Registration takes place through an in-depth interview at SHARING's office, located near the St. George subway station. Introductions are suggested after your preferences are made known. Potential sharing partners are urged to meet on several occasions to determine compatibility. The sharing concept is more than room rental. It implies shared costs, responsibilities, and, for the older person, alleviating loneliness and having an increased sense of security. In some cases, the student may provide some services in exchange for reduced cost.

Acommodation is available in homes and apartments throughout Toronto. Because of the genotype-acquainted process recommended by SHARING, students are encouraged to line up their accommodation for the fall before leaving for the summer. Inquiries are also welcomed from those wishing to share with a senior over the summer. For an appointment, call SHARING at 591-6597.

Dear Mr. I Don’t Know Who,

You are so kind. If you're on a quest with "my beautiful green eyes", be a real man and reveal your identity! Love,

H.A.S.

P.S. If you're not at least 6 feet tall, with dark hair and deep blue or brown eyes, with a dazzling physique and a sparkling personality - don't bother.

April 13th, 1986 - Beverly D. MICHELLE SMITH will be turning the big 20! Send gifts/money to her manager ROOM 221 at Glendon. P.S. Happy Birthday to you too. Darrell Ruby!
PRESIDENT ARTHURS vs. GLENDON STUDENTS

By Bill and the Cat

The March meeting of Glendon Faculty Council (held April 4, 1986) had some unusual business on its agenda. Dr. Garigue will be finishing his term as Principal of Glendon College next year. With this in view, and on written request from President Harry Arthurs, Faculty Council voted at its February meeting on the composition of the Search Committee to select Dr. Garigue's successor. Normally, this would have taken care of the matter.

However, in the interval between the two meetings it was learned that President Arthurs was not willing to accept the composition put forth by Faculty Council. Council had suggested that the Committee consist of three faculty members, three students, one staff representative, and two Presidential appointees. The President opposed this structure on two reasons. First he felt that the committee was too large to operate efficiently; and secondly, he felt that the students were "over represented" on the committee.

Sensing that there would be intense reaction to the President's views, Faculty Council Chairman Prof. Ronald Sabourin invited the President to attend the meeting and explain his position. The President graciously accepted the invitation and attended the meeting.

The President opened the discussion by observing that there was no uniform formula for such committees in the university. He felt that York would be better served if the selection procedure for principals and deans was standardized. Expanding on his thoughts, President Arthurs implied that Glendon would serve as a test case for his preferred model.

His model would have a seven member committee comprising three faculty members, one student, one staff representative, and two presidential appointees. "The only major difference between the two models is that he wants student representation cut by 66%," commented GCSU President Kathie Darroch.

It soon became apparent that student representation on the Committee was the most contentious item on the whole debate. President Arthurs stated that in his opinion it was not only appropriate, but essential that there be some student representation on the committee. However, he qualified this by insisting that "students could be adequately represented by one student. By way of rationale:

President Arthurs postulated that students do not have the requisite expertise to effectively evaluate a candidate's merits, claiming that only faculty were able to make such evaluations.

Student and faculty reaction to these comments was mixed and severe. GCSU President Jas Ahmad spoke strongly, bringing into question a host of administrative decisions which conpired against the notion of student representation. He felt that the trend towards standardization across York was bureaucratic stifling and contrary to its ideals as they are "written on walls and buildings."

Ahmad also pointed out that selection committees for both Dr. McQueen and Dr. Garigue had three students on them. "If students are incapable of participating in such decision making," asked Ahmad, "then is the President implying that our last two choices were not good?"

GCSU Director Charles Wong asked the President why students would be unable to judge the candidates — will they have the same information as everyone else on the committee? Several faculty members also questioned the President's point of view and spoke in favour of having three students on the committee.

Most notably among them were professors Michael Horn, Ian MacDonald, and Don Wilmott. Prof. MacDonald spoke eloquently for students invaluable contributions to various Faculty Council committees including Policy and Planning and Tenure and Promotions. Professor Wilmott was compelling in his defense of the students commitment to the College and their ability to participate in serious and meaningful matters.

In sharp contrast, Associate Principal Dr. Ian Gentles' argument was for reduced student representation. In a seemingly obvious effort to ingratiate himself to the President, Professor Gentles supported the President's point of view, maintaining that one student representative on the committee would be adequate.

GCSU President Kathie Darroch responded by reminding Council that the Principal at Glendon was "not just the faculty's Principal, he is the students' Principal as well." She stated that it would be "a serious mistake to forget the students" or underestimate their importance while choosing a successor for Dr. Garigue. Darroch also presented Glendon's image as a community in which the Principal was not only an administrator, but also, a leader. Later she elaborated "students and profs here (at Glendon) are..."

PRESS RELEASE

Paul Gilmor, Provost of the University of Guelph, has been appointed to conduct a study of student and college government at York University. Mr. Gilmor will be meeting with current and past student government leaders and other members of the York Community to discuss functions and needs of student government. It is expected that his report, which will be presented to the Student Relations Committee of the Board of Governors, will be available in draft form for comment by interested parties by September 1986. Mr. Gilmor is interested in hearing the view of a n y members of York University. If you are interested in meeting with Mr. Gilmor or would like to submit a written brief, please contact David Thompson, Senate Office, 667-2201.
This past year has been a learning experience for myself, and I am sure for everyone who was involved in any student activity not just Pro Tem. The same small dedicated group of students once again made "student life" at Glendon a reality. These students often work in many different groups and serve the community at large.

In particular, at Pro Tem, a small group of people made Pro Tem possible this year through their efforts. No small amount of praise should go to Scott Anderson who made the Entertainment section (at times, both French and English) what it has been. A tremendous accomplishment for any person while being able to still maintain a high degree of involvement in other Pro Tem issues. Scott is graduating this year - probably going off to study journalism somewhere in the U.S. of A. Good luck, Scott!

Another band of dedicated people helped at Pro Tem. In particular, Kenneth Haines who was (still is at this very moment) willing to put in the long hours to put together the paper "perfectly just the way I like it." He is the reason why the paper has looked so good these past few weeks. Kathie Darroch who should have been an arch enemy of Pro Tem (according to old Pro Tem/GCSU leading rules) has helped immeasurably this year. Theresa, my sister, has also helped by driving the paper after working a late night in this office. Thank God you got your licence, eh Theresa?

Allison Handson, an artist who occasionally helps me fill empty spaces or Pro Tem ads with her funnies. Sara Perry who was willing to come into the office even when I wasn't was also a great help. David Olivier who came in every Sunday night following GPHL action (Hugh never did mention your goalsetting, did he?) to help me and write the Real World series. Thank you to all of you.

To my successor, Judy Hahn, I wish the best of luck. Running the newspaper isn't as easy as it seems. All people who are interested in working on the paper should contact Judy now.

To the students of Glendon, a word of advice - WATCH OUT FOR THE OTHER CAMPUS!!! Centralization may turn out to work well but not if we don't take an active interest in its planning.

Well, I wish I could thank a francophone member of the community but despite ranging editorials, repeated ads, they just didn't care to contribute to the paper this year. If there was no French in the paper, it was YOUR fault not mine. I never claimed to be bilingually competent.

Good-bye all, it's been real!

 promi l'éditorialiste

Qu'est-ce que le bilinguisme? Pro Tem, entre autres, a tant à maintenir reprises, la nécessité de posséder les deux langues officielles du Canada, le français. Est-ce que cela impique de parler et d'écrire l'anglais tout en massacrant, détrisant et ridiculisant le langage de Voltaire? A la lecture de votre éditorial du 7 avril dernier, quiconque eut une connaissance de la langue française, la plus minime soit-elle, renoncerait d'embâlée à toucher votre papier, de peur de se salir les doigts. Nous clamosons, à nos risques et périls, que votre éditorial est un scandale, une abomination, un crime.

Pulver de telles lignes ne peut faire preuve d'insouciance ou, pire, d'incompétence. Votre mépris de la langue française ne peut passer sous silence. Les yeux francophones de Glendon sont vigilants et ne craignent pas de faire entendre leur indignation.

Messieurs de Pro Tem n'oubliez pas que vous êtes les ambassadeurs de notre collège et de sa réputation. Que pensez-vous qu'il advienne de l'opinion des lecteurs des campus principaux, de la librairie Champlain...

Notez bien que cet incident n'est pas le premier. Croyez sincèrement, Mademoiselle l'éditorialiste, que la francophonie est profondément déçue par cet acte de discrimination.

Nous passons les formules de politesse d'usage.

The Insomniac
The Long and the Short of It.

by Kevin McGran

Some of you think that I, the Insomniac, hold many insights and wise truths to some of Life's less pertinent questions. Some of you think that I am a pretentious would-be-intellect who hates Life's more pertinent questions. Some of you think 'pertinent' is an awful silly word and have probably, have in some point in life, considered tickling a total stranger on the bus. The latter are my goal audience and I want to make the rest of you like this. To this end, I am going to talk about Language Abusers.

There are two kinds of Language Abusers in the world. There are language lengtheners and shorteners (or, if you like, Longies and Shorties). There is a third group — those who make puns — but they are OK even though they incite violence in most people. Longies and Shorties though, must have their poetic licence revoked.

As students, we are all Longies of a sort. Consider, if you will, your most recent 2500 word essay for which you wrote 1500 words and had to find some more words somewhere. We know the quality of fertilizer that you added, courtesy of you thesaurus. (By the way, what's another word for thesaurus?) This sort of 'creative stretching' is perfectly acceptable because it's good for the imagination and laws.

But I am deeply troubled and concerned with redundancy and repetitiveness in the spoken and oral language as well as the written and printed language and I think, yourselves, should be too. People — ordinary humans — seem to think that we, you and I, are slow or stupid as they continually repeat over and over again what they have to say in a seemingly apparent endless manner or fashion. Anyway, I thank you get my point, or the gist of what I mean.

The other kind are the Shorties and you can spot one of them from a distance the length of an acronym. These people are cute and do cute things with words. These people cannot be tolerated.

Shorties watch TV, go to the X, listen to CFTR play INXS and XTC. They ride the TTC to YU or U of T where they go to get their BA, MA, or PhD. They say TGIF at the end of a week and do all their shopping at IGA.

Acronymism starts in the early teens as young school girls write to their boyfriends "2gether 4ever = 60ex." This is harmless enough (but intolerably cute) but if it is not stopped at this early age, these people will join terrorist organizations like the PLO, IRA, or gawd forbid, the PTA.

Admittedly, there are some good acronyms like SNAFU which I can’t print because of the FU part and Richard Nixon’s CREEP campaign — the Committee for the Re-Election of the President (honest). "ACRONYMS" itself is an acronym as it stands for: "A Cute Rhyme Or Nice (You)phenism — Mixed Society."

We should laugh at these people for they need help. They are probably losing friends daily.

All kidding aside, I must go now to write an SA and study for an XM. C U later, Late-Nighters.

Post Scriptum — — — This, sadly (or happily, depending on your point of view), is my last column for Pro Tem. I hope I have, during this past year, brought to light many of life’s less pertinent questions and I hope, one day, you will tickle strangers on the bus. Also, I’ve never asked you, but I hope you like my moon (I know the Loved One does) which was drawn for me by my Irish Friend (there, I mentioned you).

Yours pseudo-prettily,

The Insomniac

PPS Maybe now I’ll be able to get a good night’s rest.

beau monde - 2276

By Kenneth Haines

Glamour, sparkle, and wit have once again been demonstrated by some fine young students of this College...

As a social event at Glendon, the Gala Premiere of Friday evening past attested to the charm, enthusiasm and dedication to both achievement and unity of the community. Handsomely attired couples quickly pored into the dining hall, which in fact had been transformed by the organizers of the event, for the dinner. Garlanded with red, orange, and black stars, streamers, and balloons, the O.D.H. was indeed a scene of fascination - a stage of grandeur and excitement...

The dinner was quite enticing and was served with Berton et Gatti er wine. The awards themselves honoured several dynamic young athletes and organizers. This year, for the first time, we were distinguished with the opportunity to witness the presentation of the John S. Proctor Award. The recipient, Miss. Dana Smith, was pleasantly overwhelmed and was tributed with a standing ovation as were the recipients of the Escott Reid Plaque, Mr. Steven Massland and Miss Michele Heath. Other awards presented included those for special recognition, Most Valuable Player, Most Improved College (Way to go Glendon!), Inter-College Championships, and school letters.

A champagne toast was offered - followed quickly by dessert (Happy Birthday to Miss Debra Manger). Complementing the evening was a dance with an extremely talented "night club" style band who were, above all else, quite persistent in their efforts to ensure that 'a good time was had by all'.

The evening progressed from there without denouement... The lights came down (and went back up and down again!), the balloons flew high and the streamers flew wildly across the dance floor, and the party began. The dancing couples bounced, whirled, bopped and twisted to songs from the 50s and 80s - they then embraced flowingly to the more romantic songs...

Over all, the evening was a huge success for all those who were fortunate enough to have attended. My compliments to Miss. Cathy Clarke for her role at Glendon and my most sincere best wishes for John & Cynthia upon the announcement of their engagement.

The following is a metaphorical examination of the situation in South Africa.

By Evelyn Purdy

Mandela and Tut are at odds with Botha. Botha holds a pretty good hand. He holds the power card. He also has the weapon but can’t figure out how to colour code it. Ivan and Sam want to make sure they back the right horse; winner takes all! You see they each want to be kind of the playground. Then there are other guys who have just learned a new word, “apartheid.” They say boycott. Yes, but what about the rest of the playground?

Ivan and Sam are playing ‘blind man’s bluff’ and the guys are as high as they can go. The big guys are not alone either, they’ve got their cohorts. Sammy and Ivan have let some of the other guys into their club. Besides Kruger, there’s John Bull who was once a real big shot himself. And Joan of Arc, who was no slouch either. And there are others who have joined the club like Joshua (who was also a fighter), and Mahatma (who used to be a pacifist) and Confucious and... and God knows who else. I heard someone say that the other guys, you know which one I mean, forlet his name, had sipped up too but you know how gossip is... but like everyone else he’d probably want a piece of the action too. Who cares?

It only takes one thumb to blow the whole shebang to kingdom come, so five, ten, twenty, what difference does it make in the long run?

Anyway, there was this little shrimp of a guy, Kiwi, I think his name was, he was of Maori, British heritage; anyway, he got fed up with what the bullies were up to and he said, “Look you guys are big and if you want to play ‘one upmanship’, (that’s what he called their game), I can’t stop you. But you can’t play in my backyard and I’m going to tell the whole world what you’re up to. I don’t even care if you don’t let me ride in your cars anymore, it’s just not worth it. I mean it,” he said, and he did.

What if all the other little guys did the same thing? I mean, boycotted Ivan and Sam and company? Refused to let them come and play with their resources? Kicked out their multinational? I’ll tell you what: they’d all have to band in together and help each other through because there would be some pretty rough going. And anyway, if Sam or Ivan or whoever gets backed into a corner... and pushes the button, everyone will die anyway, whether they agreed or not!

But in the words of the old Scottish monument: “If it be life that waits we shall live forever unconquered. If death, we shall die at last, strong in our pride and free.”

Who knows where a path will lead? But don’t be afraid to start the quest. I always remember Don (Don was the craziest old fool who never lived except, of course, in the hearts and minds of those who understood the idea Cervantes’ imaginative scenario, who dreamed the impossible dream and reached out and stretched... and stretched...and... grasped the stars.
Gibson Leaving Pub

by Elizabeth McCullough

Gibson has finished his term as manager of the Café de la Terrasse. He has been the manager since 1984 and has initiated many changes and improvements to the pub.

One of the major changes was to the appearance of the café. When Gibson took charge, he completely redecorated the pub. This past summer, he studied three proposals for renovations. Two proposals dealt with expanding the pub entirely. One idea was to expand into the pipe room. The other suggested enlarging the pub into the pinball room. Neither of these measures could be implemented due to the restrictive cost involved. Either one would have meant spending over $100,000. Gibson says, "Not being able to expand the pub was a disappointment."

Another disappointment was not making a profit during the second summer of his term. This was due in part to the French Immersion, Conference Center and the cancellation of the St. Jean Baptiste festivities. This loss of revenue left Gibson much closer than anywhere else.

We expect to participate in decision making at the College level just as we expect them to show an interest in our activities." During a recess in the meeting Dr. Gerig implicitly agreed with Daroch, noting that it was difficult for non-Glendonites to conceive of Glendon as a close-knit community. Outsiders, he said, see us as a college or a faculty where students come in the morning and leave in the evening.

President Arthurs left the meeting at the midway point giving no indication of a possibility. Gibson computerized the entire system at the pub during his term as well.

One idea that didn't turn out well for Gibson was to have the staff wear pub T-shirts while working. He says of their feelings, "They don't want to feel that they're working at McDonalds" and they didn't like being "told to wear a uniform." Gibson thinks the centralization scheme of the York administration "is not necessarily a good decision." He says, "York passes down rules that Glendon should follow". Gibson has found working with the Glendon administration was better since "There are decisions that both sides can work with."

A major problem Gibson foresees for his successor is the possibility that the province may raise the drinking age to 21. He says, "They're (the province) reviewing all the liquor laws. That's raising the legal age a distinct possibility." He feels that this would be "rather tragic" since developing social drinking habits are "all part of the learning process." Gibson cited statistics which show that of drunk drivers only 8.6% are from the 19-21 age group while 40% are from the 21-26 age group. Should the age of majority be raised to 21, the very existence of the pub would be threatened.

The recent survey of the café was done not only to give Gibson some indication of the job he has done, but also to "give some sort of direction to the next manager." The survey results indicate increasing the menu would be a good idea. In Gibson's opinion, the new manager will be obliged to make more office work. The only applicant for the position of manager is Mike Tincome. He has yet to be ratified however.

Thoughts on Spring

By the Purple Crab (April Fools! The season is short, therefore will write in point form.)

— Suddenly, Spring is full of "suddenlies"! Spring becomes the world. My earmuffs are still sitting on top of my dresser. I toss them under the bed in sheer delight.

— The grass is brown, the trees are bare. Where then, is Spring? It is in the air.

— Somehow gravity has reversed. I feel like I am walking on the moon.

— I see the child in everyone. Some people even look like refugees from Bayview Glen.

FACTIONALISM — WHO ME? or "PLEASE PASS THE BUTTER"

By Veronica Gayle

I have returned from the provincial Liberal policy convention in Hamilton. With some toes possibly broken, baggy eyed, and sleepless, I am compelled to give a brief analysis of the weekend's proceedings with a personal touch.

As this was my first political convention, I was agog and aghast at the virtually ceaseless upbeat atmosphere spread across the time period of three days. Where else can you find someone willing to discuss NATO at 3 a.m.?

It was called a policy convention, whereby we engage in scintillating debate over external affairs issues, and other social portents. I went to find out if we live in a democracy and came back reeling with the notion that the almighty hospitality suite should be given a patent. (The hospitality suite is where the candidates ply the delegates with alcohol in order to gain support.) I decided that we, as Canadians, do have some input into policy making if our ideas are given acceptance by the party leader. I admit, some personal satisfaction is gained in aiding the political socialization of Canada.

Observing certain isolated interactions, I am inclined to believe that the party attempted to create more electoral support in the guise of mass euphoria, while the delegates in exchange gained connections and renewed friendships. The balance was unnerving to "wholly an observer" as myself.

My hand was perpetually extended to either be stuffed with a campaign leaflet, or to be introduced to another badged delegate. On the subject of badges, my name was spelled wrong, and although I represented Glendon, mine read an outlying area which I have never been to. Needless to say, I have now been educated on the electoral district, and have met everyone's aunt from this place.

I have never heard the terms: "on behalf of..." and "I would like to extend..." so overused in my life. It was a linguistics paradise. (Is Richard Handscombe listening?)

I became wary of the social proceedings when at luncheon I found myself passing a plate of butter three times around our breadless table.

One candidate for LPCO executive was particularly interesting. In the introduction to her speech, one of her campaigners made this statement: "... and gentlemen, you will be happy to know that she is not a feminist..." The women were expressionless. We weren't told the meaning, if any, in that introduction. It probably coincides with some of the sentiments expressed in her campaign leaflet. I would like to extend to you, on behalf of her campaign workers, what the explosive slogans read: (reprinted from newspaper clipings) "But the very fact that she didn't talk about women's issues ironically pleases ... women.

"A tall, slender blonde..., "... did not mention equal pay for work of equal value, establishing true equality for women, or any other women's issues." These were intended to be her personal ideologies, and election platform.

She was not elected, as she withdrew her candidacy. If elected, we could go back to pre-industrial revolution concepts of society, i.e. brass bloomers.

Another candidate made this revelation: "... the staff on a small newspaper is small." I think we could all gain from this little oupouthing of insight.

The weekend was distinctly informative, and with a bird's eye view... fun. (Besides, it beats what I read in the newspapers.)
It was a night filled with glamour and excitement as this year’s annual Genie Awards took place at the Metro Toronto Convention Centre. This year’s big winner was My American Cousin, an autobiographical light-hearted comedy/drama by Sandy Wilson. It racked in Best Actor (John Wildman), Best Actress (Margaret Lanarick) and Best Screenplay and Direction (Sandy Wilson) amongst other awards. After the ceremony, everyone enjoyed the prepared delicacies and the dance floor in the banquet room. It was an exhilarating time for all!

John has been extremely helpful to both his co-workers and to his fellow students.

Neil has worked extremely well behind the scenes and has provided his colleagues with many anecdotes. He has always been effective by virtue of his ability to simplify matters.

This year's Student's Council has shown great promise for the future of Glendon. Actively, these fine young men & women tackled several problems, have made wise policy decisions, and have kept on top of student affairs. They have also done a tremendous job relating students' thoughts & concerns to the Executive and have volunteered their time to help out with social and academic events.

WELL DONE!

Kenneth has done a very good job. Due to his advertising efforts, many more people were made aware of the elections and more positions were elected. While some may have disagreed with his rulings, Kenneth did what he felt was right. His dedication to have more students vote and having elections for every position was reflected in every part of his duties.

Peter has done a terrific job as the manager of the Café de la Terrasse! Through renovations & innovations he has made the pub a hot item (especially on Thursday nights). The luncheon specials, dart tournaments, and the 'Hockey Game' near the big screen T.V. have all added personality to Glendon's official party place.

Ken has been faced with a number of difficulties this year. Although he had started the year off on the right track, his staff has dwindled and R.G. has not been on the air as much as perhaps it should have been. His record library system has been very helpful as well as his set-up in the D.J. booth. The station will require a fair amount of organization next year in order to serve as both an informative and entertaining medium.

“LUCAS” cuts through the superficial

By Stefan Counter

"The Stones have their fingers on the pulse of the basic premise of 'pop' music success — that its public buys sound." So wrote Andrew Loog Oldham for the liner notes on the Rolling Stones' first album 22 years ago. That "sound", a raw, exciting basic approach to rhythm and blues comes through loud and clear on the Stones' latest album, Dirty Work. One's first impression of the record, as is usual with a new Stones disc, is that it is a lot of well-produced, high energy, rock'n'roll noise. Lyrically and musically, though the group covers approximately twenty-five years of styles and sounds, political events, sex and drugs, in a focused, uncompromising collection of tunes.

Mick Jagger has written honest, insightful lyrics which hit home with an occasionally disturbing impact. The music is equally hard-hitting; the Stones have never sounded better, and with guest artists like Jimmy Page and production help from Steve Lillywhite (U2, Psychodelic Furs, Peter Gabriel) the album manages to sound fresh and open while maintaining the classic, dense 'Stones sound which is the trademark of the Glummer Twins. Jagger is in fine vocal form throughout, using his potent ambiguous articulation and energetic delivery for maximum effect in the block.

Lucas starring 14 year-old Toronto actor Corey Haim (as Lucas) is the story of a boy's first experience of love and the hardships associated with it. During summer vacation Lucas, while out insect collecting, meets a new girl in town, Maggie (Kerri Green) and instantly falls for her. Over the course of the summer, the two become close friends. Lucas convinces that football, parties and other typical antics are "superficial" and that the real fun is in symphonies, bug collecting, etc. Maggie seems to be willing to go along with his assessment of life until the school year begins. Caught up in the "superficial" world of high school life, she falls for the football captain, Lucas' friend and protector Cappie (Charlie Sheen) who convinces her to become a cheerleader. Lucas' life is shattered when Cappie and Maggie start going out together. In order to impress Maggie, Lucas joins the football team only to get badly hurt in the process.

At various points throughout the picture Lucas tells Maggie to "keep an open mind". This is something the audience must do also. There are some obviously predictable events in the film, but at the same time things that you think are going to happen don't. Take for example, the football scene. Lucas is open way down field with little time left in the game. The ball is thrown to him — the sequence is, of course, in reverse motion. The ball falls into his arms and then to the ground. In the ensuing scramble for the ball, he is injured and taken away in an ambulance.

And another typical teenage cliché is the nerdy girl falling for the nerdy guy. We expect that by the end of the film the nerdy girl will have gone through a complete change in Grease, Breakfast Club — and become a knock-out, making the nerd guy finally notice her. Not so in this case.

As one can see this is not your typical boy meets girl/boy loses girl cliché. The clichés and predictable scenes are absent with good, clean humour prevailing. It is good to see that with the growing proliferation of teenage high school life films at least one is realistic enough to document what it is really like growing up.

NEW STONES HITS THE MARK

Glendon's literary magazine, Elixir, which publishes annually students' prose and poetry, is, as this is being typed, being printed. Many people wonder exactly what Elixir is and when it supposed to come out as it has a rather low profile. Elixir should be out by the end of the week. When it arrives from the printers, Glendon will have an unofficial Elixir day as the magazine will be distributed free outside the cafeteria. Some copies will be reserved and available in the English and French departments.

This year, with financing help from the GCSU, the Dean's Office and what is left from a government grant, Elixir will publish 500 copies of 42 pages of poetry, prose, and photographs.

Elixir was blessed this year which means quality material, and for cost, had to pull many superior poems. The Editors are very pleased with the progress given by Glendon's poets. This year's edition is a well balanced collection of a great many contributors. Sadly lacking, however, is input from the French population.

The Editors thank the contributors and look forward to next year's edition.

THE CHURC

By Asifn Qureshi

Who can forget Spinal Tap's outrageous 60s spoof video, the FLOWER CHILDREN? At first glance, it may seem that The Church (WEA/Reprise) are the incarnation of this, but look again. Despite the cover jacket showing the four lads in wild paisley suits, The Church are too strong to be written off as being just a revivalist group. This band, part of a whole Australian invasion (including Hoodoo Gurus, Divinyls, INXS, and Midnight Oil) have been heavily influenced by many 70s bands as well as 60s. Says drummer Richard Ploog: "We pull our influences in from many directions, era and styles. Seventies bands like Bebop Deluxe, and The Can have really influenced us. But I'll never reach the 60s influence. In fact, the drummer that I admire the most is Michael Clarke of The Stranglers."

The Church, presently touring with Echo and the Bunnymen, have been together since 1980 and have a total of six albums out. It is through the strength of the earlier five that The Church can attribute their originality and duration. Unfortunately, HEYDAY has been released at a time where record buyers are few and we therefore making them very easy to misunderstand and, subsequently, dismiss. Although HEYDAY is supposedly their breakthrough LP, the fans who came to see them at the Echo show short of weeks before, might be surprised by the strength of the earlier five LPs. The Church have a large cult following in Europe and North America, but not as much in their native Australia.

"We don't get as much air time in Australia as we do here in North America or Europe. Australians are mostly straight, mainstream rock'n'roll. Here: 'I prefer to rot'/don't when it comes to poetic and experimental music, although UNGRINDED is a 'little bit hinting that we can get away with it. Heyday did well there. The main problem with being in Australia is the fact that there's this feeling that we're at the end of the world. It makes touring very tiring. But HEYDAY had to be promoted."

By David Olivier and Theresa Sears

He's on the other side of the world now. He's waiting for his first plane in the summer."

The Stones have some fun. This album is the most popular ever. They have something to do with the fact that the producer was Peter Walsh of simple minds fame. "He's a great collaborator, a nice guy. Walsh's expertise combined with the exceptional songwriting. We're, hopefully, to help create a strong LP, yet still unoinlouche. However, because of no lack of talent, and a certain finesse that comes with experience, they are durable than other revivalist groups such as the Colour Fields, or fellow Australians, Hoodoo Gurus. Songs like MY RABBIT'S head, and You and WORSHIP are a little bit hinting that we can get away with it as well as the instrumental cut, Happy Hunting Ground. The video accompanied this with a means to the end. I think we've created a monster unknowingly. It's at a point now where the video has become more important than the music. Now all that matters is how well it looks. Of course, imagery is important in music — a person should look good, and people do identify with dress — but it should take a secondary role in music. I believe that video is just a fad though, and hopefully, it will give way to simpler things."

The Church will complete their tour with Echo and the Bunnymen, then it's on to a few solo dates in the States. Then perhaps there will be a headlining tour in a few months. "We, of course, do not want to be the opening band forever. We've got a large enough following on our own without losing money, as we did in 84. Maybe we'll be back at the Concert Hall or something in the summer."

Until then, let's hope that they survive being misunderstood. Of course, a nice man, and a band — they deserve headlining on their own now."

APRIL FOOLS PREPPY STYLE

By Nancy Stevens

Theresa Sears and David Switzer must have gotten hold of my diary. And yours. And most of your family and friends' also. For they have managed to put on stage all of our inner fears and idiosyncrasies for the whole world to see. Oh No! Sears and Switzer's latest comedic adventure is titled Past the 80s: Theories and Theories for Getting By, and it is a fun poke at the people and lifestyles of this glorious decade. Most will recognize David Switzer at once, but may not be sure from where. He is the father in that fabulous S Watson TV Dinner commercial who recommends that his daughter "do not eat the dessert first." Sears and Switzer are winners of the 1979 DuMaurier Search for Stars award, and the team has been delighting Toronto audiences ever since as actors, writers, and directors.

This new comedy revue takes us into the living rooms and bedrooms of our country, exposes the problems there, and offers humorous remedies for dealing with them. This duo indulges in such topics as birth control, Life According to Cosmo and Penthouse, Penis Envy, "(not only don't we have one, not only can't we revent one, but borrowing one is going to be tricky?)" and they all boil down to that ancient war between men and women ("Now I know why dogs' eyes are so sad, they spend their lives being faithful to men.")

Some of the sketches in the first act are a bit forced, and Theresa Sears' whiny, valley-girl voice at first gets on one's nerves. But the second act shines where the first act dips, and the comedy flows as freely as the drinks and the laughter.

Instead of going to see a psychiatrist, you can see this play - it is not unlike a wacky Woody Allen movie put on stage. And if you see you innermost thoughts in the spotlight, don't worry, no one is looking at you. Everybody is done for, buys worrying and looking at themselves.

This album is the most significant work the Stones have come to come out with since Exile. Jaggar and Richards have finally gotten it together, as well as musically, and their timing is right. They have been able to combine the lyrical promise of Undercover with the musical prowess of Tattoo You to create a new, great Rolling Stones album.

The ending (about as effective an adventure to the mind) is to tie together all the strange things that took place in the movie. This attempt was admirable—admirably bad. Naturally, this was only in keeping with the rest of the film. The ending is predictable, so much so that I knew how it was going to end about 15 minutes into the movie. To put it bluntly, April Fool's Day is a bad film. If you want to see a film that will give you exactly what you want, you won't have to wait until April Fool's Day. For the rest of you, don't be a fool and save your money for any other movie that comes along.

concession or compromise, and merely hoping that Council would review its decision. Council, however, remained convinced in its conviction and voted to reaffirm its original motion calling for a single member committee with three student representatives. During the final debate, Dr. Graham Reid advised Council that if the size of the committee was now an issue, it could be resolved by removing one student and one faculty member from the committee.

"The issue is far from resolved," says Darroch "and I fear that once again it will be left until the summer when there are no students to defend their case."

COPING IN THE 80s

As a closing piece, it is as strong as Writing On A Friend in the reminiscence of the Exile on Main Street album from 1972. A thirty second recording of the last extravaganza playing the blues on his piano and ends the album in a sensitive tribute to "the sixties" with someone who was with them from the beginning."

RECREATION GLENDON WANTS YOU!

The Finish Line
by Hugh Mansfield

"More Money." At last this is what York University is asking from the students next year for inter-college athletics.

As it stands right now, the participation in inter-college athletics has reached a peak. Unfortunately, the athletic budget will be cut leaving the burden of equipment expenses in the hands of the students. For those of you who participate in college sports, this is a hard pill to swallow. Recreational sports are a great release from the tensions of studying and deserve more recognition from the provost's office.

How can we not afford funding for inter-college recreation when athletics at the varsity level are receiving paid coaches, free uniforms and the best available facilities not to mention gym time. In other words, those of us who are not as talented will not receive the benefits of the varsity crowd.

I urge you to write the provost's office and voice your concerns relating to this issue. Recreation is a big part of student life. However, it should be a big part of our wallet.

Letters should be addressed as follows:
Provost Tom Meininger,
5924 Keele Campus

Letters may be sent through inter-campus mail FREE.

The following Glendon teams came first in the Inter-College competition this year.
