Students demand solutions to high fees

by Lynn Forin

Over 30 Glendon College students made their way to the Keele Campus to join other students in a show of solidarity against projected increases in residence fees. In an intense question period, Director of Housing and Food Operations, Norm Crandles, was asked to defend a proposed 6.7 per cent increase in costs.

Glendon’s representatives were highly vocal. Gus Pantelidis, President of the GCSU, opened with an informative and factual introductory comment outlining the main areas of conflict and concern. York is exempt from the 4.6 per cent rent increase ceiling in the Landlord and Tenant Act because they consult their student body through the Residence Budget Committee’s recommendations. The value of this consultation was questioned by students in a question period, Director of Residence fees. In an intense discussion, faculty and students were highly vocal. Problems close Bistro

by Robert Mackey

Staff problems forced the closing of the Bistro on the Glendon campus for the whole of last week.

In an interview, Restauronics Glendon manager Eddy Yagh, stated he was unable to open the Bistro because the regular cook was suffering from back problems and could not work. Also, one full-time waiter had been fired at the beginning of the week. Under these circumstances, he said, proper and adequate service could not be offered to the Bistro clientele.

Fred Whiting, the fired waiter, said he was fired for no warning and no due cause. He claimed that since November 1989, he has had an agreement with Yagh allowing him every Friday afternoon off. Contrarily, Yagh strongly rejected this claim, alleging that Whiting had just picked up and left three Fridays in succession.

Visite de Paul Martin assurée

Le Devoir à Montréal de la semaine passée stipulant que les libéraux à Glendon appuyeraient Jean Chrétien, un autre candidat au leadership. Renic prétend “The Glendon club is solidly behind Paul Martin.”

Le club des jeunes Libéraux de Glendon a moins de 50 membres. Ce groupe sera le premier à élire ses délégués pour la conférence prévue à Calgary en juin. Renic estime le coût de la conférence à 5000-6000 pour chaque délégué. Tente-cinq des délégués à Calgary seront des jeunes. Selon Tom Renic, la plupart de ces jeunes délégués voteraient pour Paul Martin puisqu’ils réfléxion des nouvelles idées, et sa vision pourra contribuer au Canada des années 90.

Cependant... les murs de York Hall et des résidences sont couverts des affiches pour le discours de Jean Chrétien...

THIS TEASING ISN’T PLEASING

by Leslie Coats and Heather Scoffield

Last week, Glendon’s cafeteria was tastelessly decorated with banners advertising the names of the Winter Carnival teams. When an official complaint was made to the Race and Ethnic Relations Committee about the racist and sexist connotations of the name “Black Slave Bunnies From Hell...” etc., the team changed its name “to protect the university’s integrity.” In an open letter from Stephen Moore, Director of Cultural Affairs, GCSU, no mention was made of withdrawing the name for the integrity of women or of blacks.

The Black Suede Bunnies etc. should be commended for their prompt withdrawal of their repugnant name, as should the disbanding of the Bricks (On se fait mettre). Queen Taline and les Taquins (We tease to please), on the other hand, have not withdrawn their slogan. Instead, they made a feeble excuse through Moore’s letter. Their statement of disclaimer, by trying to cover their asses with memo, does little to annul a morally subservive slogan hanging ominously in the faces of Glendon students as they eat.

The Bricks, The Black Slave Bunnies and the Teasers may have appeased their consciences with name withdrawals and a statement of intentions, but the intentions implied on their banners contradict their tardy diplomacy. Regardless of anyone’s intentions, women and minorities must live with the consequences of the messages aired on the “harmless banners.” These banners were not promoting “fun and spirit”, the intention of the Winter Carnival as indicated by Moore, instead, the banners promoted negative stereotypes which aggravate the tensions of a “society as it becomes increasingly complicated.”

Knowing many team members personally, we are sure they did not intend to offend anyone. However, in not thinking about the implications of slogans, and - in the case of the Teasers - by refusing to make amendments, they have insulted much of the Glendon community.

Carnival

To the Glendon College Community:

Recently a complaint was lodged with the Race and Ethnic Relations Committee against the name of one of the Winter Carnival teams. Since then, the team has voluntarily changed their name to the “Black Suede Bunnies From Hell Go Part V Nous Nous Multiplions.” Their reason for doing so was to protect the university’s integrity and they would also like it to be made public that the name was absolutely not intended to have any racial slur.

Concerning the teams of the Bricks and Queen Taline and the Teasers and objections to their banners: the Bricks have, as a team unit, disbanded and removed their banner! This was done because they were not fully aware of the connotations of their French slogan since it is their second language. The complaint about the slogan on the Queen Taline and the Teasers banner has been discussed in depth between myself and the team and we have decided to leave the banner as it is. They recognize the concerns expressed and would like it made public that their slogan was absolutely in no way intended to offend anyone.

Déclaration personnelle au sujet du Carnaval:

Le Carnaval d’hiver est une semaine dédiée à la détente et à encourager les étudiants à travailler en équipe afin d’atteindre des objectifs communs. C’est une période durant laquelle les étudiants peuvent “relaxer leur corps” et voir le côté amusant des choses dans une société qui devient de plus en plus complexe. Le but recherché n’est pas de faire du mal aux autres.

En conclusion, toute plainte devrait être adressée personnellement au sein de l’Association des Étudiants du Collège Glendon.

Je n’ai jamais eu l’occasion d’afficher une annonce sur un des nombreux tableaux que l’AECG met à la disposition des étudiants. Cependant, j’ai souvent eu l’occasion d’y pratiquer ma grammaire française...!

‘Les dits tableaux, débordants d’impunités, on se noie dans une mer de fautes de langue française!’ Je ne peux, hélas, imaginer aucune raison valable de rencontrer des erreurs d’orthographe et de grammaire sur des enseignes soumises à l’oeil de la communauté du collège. Un comité reconnaîtrait à travers l’Ontario pour son bilinguisme et surtout pour son enseignement de français de haute qualité. Quelle honte!

Mais, à qui revient la faute? On ne peut réellement accuser les étudiants puisque, quelquefois, il s’agit d’étudiants dont la langue maternelle est l’anglais. Cela est, je m’y vois qu’un coupable: l’AECG...

... pour donner autorisation d’affichage en español son nom qui, en fait, nous représente tous, les Anglais comme les Français. Une affiche boursée d’erreur devrait-elle recevoir ce droit?

J’ignore comment l’AECG s’y prend pour accorder le privilège d’affichage, mais seulement un connaissance de la langue devrait être en mesure de l’autoriser...

Women's Group formed to fight sexism

by Linda Kingston

Several women at Glendon, with individual interests in women's issues, have formed a collective tentatively named "Le comité d'Action des Etudiantes de Glendon," in response to sexism at Glendon.

The group was originally prompted by an advertising campaign to promote the November fashion show. The ads featured a nude female student strategically covering her private parts.

The women formed a group on a suggestion by Women's Studies Professor Didi Khayatt after much discussion about their feelings in response to the posters.

Deux membres du comité, Karine Morin et Chantal Huot ont décidé leurs objectifs, en parlant d'encourager les étudiants à prendre conscience du sexisme et du racisme. Puisque le Comité est encore nouveau, les membres se rencontrent encore pour adopter un plan d'action. La rapidité des événements et d'encourager à prendre une décision du mouvement condamné la violence contre la femme.

According to members of Le Comité, the GCSU decided to create a women's committee in response to petitions against the decision. At the time they were unaware of the existence of the Comité d’Action, which does not want to lose its independence by becoming part of a new portfolio under the dominion of the student government. They suggested that the GCSU cooperate with them rather than wasting time and energy, provided they share the same objectives.

Due to the newness of the group, and lack of recognition of its existence by students (as recently as the last issue of Pro Tem), it is not officially open to everyone yet, since they are still in the planning stages. The Comité has been approached by the Vice-President of the GCSU to meet and discuss the possibility of funding for the rest of this year and for presenting a budget for next year, once the group has official status.

Members of Le Comité are involved in the planning of International Women's Week at Glendon, a prime focus of the group at this time, and all are encouraged to help out.

In addition, the Women's Resource Centre in Manor Glendon opens March 8 on International Women's Day. The Centre is founded by Ina Motol and is a French research center on women's issues. The Comité seems to be taking up where the now inactive women's network left off. Hopefully, we will be hearing more about Le Comité d'Action des Etudiantes de Glendon in the weeks to come.

GCSU - Pub relations poor

by Peter Mallett

Carnival week at Glendon proved to be no less turbulent a time period than any other. After the first event, students were questioning who really ran school events: GCSU or Cafe de la Terasse manager Roger Little.

The Pub threatened to pull out of the Carnival Week dance unless a steep admission price of four dollars was lowered. GCSU was enraged when it found the only option it had was to do the dance at the suggested price. Steve Moore, GCSU Director of Cultural Affairs, was obviously disturbed at the pub for flexing its political muscles.

"They say it's fine in advance and then two hours later they pull out," Moore said. "I'm impossible to get the Cafe to do an event in two hours."

While Moore and the rest of GCSU are fairly upset, Pub Manager Roger Little said it is only a matter of dollars and cents.

Little said he's trying to run a business and participating in a dance with a four dollar gate charge would not have been profitable. "It's a lack of communication and understanding, I'm not funded year to year," Little said. "I'm trying to maintain the Pub as a stable administration. I can't take financial losses to keep GCSU happy."

also questioned why events like dances are not held in the Pub. As the GCSU and Pub continue their poor relations, it seems students will be the ones to suffer. According to Little, he has seen student administrations come and go, but this year is the worst. Steve Moore said he's looking for ways of doing school events without the help of the Pub.

L'esclavage, toujours l'esclavage par Michèle Génaud, Membre du Comité d'action des étudiantes de Glendon ici, je me fais le porte-parole de millions d'êtres humains à qui on a infligé savamment la peur, le complexe d'infériorité, le tremblement, l'agoraphobie.

Le gaspillage est loin de la maison, loin de la maison, loin de la maison... Je n'entends point armée de vérités décisives. Cependant, en toute sérénité, je pense qu'il serait bon que certaines choses soient dites. Ces choses, je vais les dire, non les crier car depuis longtemps le cri est sorti de ma vie toutefois son écho se fait encore entendre. Ce cri sain de l'injustice discriminatoire (raciale et sexiste) que je croyais loin de moi, loin de mon université et voilà que cruellement vous me faites sentir de l'ombre pour ne m'apercuevoir que je ne suis pas une des vôtres, mais plutôt qu'une femme noire. Oui, une femme noire. Deux oppressions, deux combats à livrer contre cette société où la masculinité et le blancherépriment. Aujourd'hui je vous sers à pro- que la raison pour laquelle je me suis frustrée de l'utilisation du mot "slave" n'est pas seule- ment en pensant à mes ancêtres esclaves mais plutôt à moi-même. Je me suis apercue de par cette expérience de mon propre esclavage. L'esclavage auquel la culture blanche m'a enseigné.

Dès mon enfance, on m'a appris, on m'a peinte, on m'a modelée à la civilisation blanche. J'ai été à l'école pour apprendre la culture blanche. Je vais sortir du milieu scolaire pour ensuite m'intégrer dans un milieu de travail blanc. De par cela, j'ai toujours à me prouver face au blanc. Vous voyez, la civilisation blanche nous a arrachés, dés- persés, confondus, condamnés au pire qu'on en a perdu nos racines. Devrais-je retourner dans mon pays ancestral pour me retrouver.

Le Canada, ne prêchez que par le multiculturelman, mais ce dernier peut seulement exister dans un pays où le blanc mâle est supérieur à la femme blanche; celui-ci à son tour est supérieur à l'homme noir et celui-ci est supérieur à la femme noire?

De par cette échelle, vous voyez bien que j'ai le droit de me révolter contre vos attentes désvenues et tant que j'en aurai la force, je le ferai. Non, ceci n'est pas une menace, mais une triste réalité.

Questions sans réponses

par Karine Morin, Membre du Comité d'action des étudiées de Glendon

Has the GCSU read about the history of black slaves in Ontario? Do they know how black women were treated under slavery? What they have to live through nowadays as immigrants, being called "jungle bunnies" and "black bitches"? Yes, it is Hell and I have never felt so black in my whole life. Je ne comprends pas en quoi consiste le rôle d'un comité pour les affaires féminines au sein de l'association étudiante, si dans toutes activités culturelles les AECG fait preuve de sexisme et de racisme.

seventy-five percent of the questions asked at the "Drak Queen Contest" were degrading to women. And comment excuse-t-on qu'une équipe soit gagnante ante lorsqu'à une question posée en français: "Comment décritez-vous une relation sexuelle avec un condom?", la partici- dans les deux langues. Une autre chanson alle plus subtilement une douce mélodie à un poème. L'impression d'ensemble est un immense sentiment de quiétude au rythme doux et voluptueux de la guitare omni allée de Daniel Lanois qui domine la plupart de ses morceaux. Le moins que l'on puisse dire est que l'enregistrement des diverses chansons a été plutôt composite. En effet, certaines parties ont été enregistrées en Angleterre, à Dublin, à New York, à Hamilton, la plupart du travail ayant été tout de même fait à la Nouvelle-Orléans.

De nombreux musiciens avec qui Daniel Lanois avait déjà travaillé sont venus apporter leur contribution à cet album, notamment Larry Mullen Jr. et Adam Clayton de U2, Brian en France offers two pro- grammes. Glendonites in Edinburgh

Everything is compact in Edinburgh. Small cars crowd small streets. As a pedestrian from Ontario, one is rarely made aware of the fact that cars have the right of way. Has the 'cult of the car' reached Britain?

Edinburgh is a wonderfully enchanting place - Dickensonian England springs quickly to mind. Unfortunately, though, its beauty is somewhat marred by an overwhelming use of cars as the major means of transportation in and around the city. Although the Green movement is incredibly strong, the Scots (not to be confused with the British, they are fierce about remaining distinct) have yet to practice what they preach. Although all bookstores have a section devoted to 'Green' books, recycling is next to non-existent, except for a noble attempt by the Edinburgh university student union at bottle recycling on campus.

Controls on car exhaust emissions are absent and one automobile association is lobbying for "relief" roads. They are currently tunneling underneath Edinburgh, if not Scotland, to allow for easier access of cars into the castle. It is rather disheartening to walk the Royal Mile only to be confronted by a sea of cars which covers the castle's Esplanade.

But, not to be the bearer of too much doom and gloom, Edinburgh is a fantastically beautiful city. If rather grey, there are enough green spaces to help ease the tension of city-living. Some of these green spaces contain mountains and one dormant volcano.

Edinburgh University has a strong student union, which has become stronger in recent months due to a now-infamous Polltax. The tax, introduced by Thatcher's government in April of this year (1989) is basically a head tax which requires everyone 18 and older to pay a set amount, thus effectively getting rid of property tax.

Students (all young persons) will be hit the hardest as they traditionally are living on (or below) the poverty line. As if to add insult to injury, the Tory plan to implement a system of loans to replace traditional student grants threatens equal access to university education, which is already costly. Those hardest hit will be lower income students and women.

The university student union responded in a way that demonstrates true sensitivity to the needs of its voters. A number of protest rallies were organized and a delegation of 250 students (from a student population of 12,000) was sent to a national protest at Parliament in London.

EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY HIGHLIGHTS

• Edinburgh's University is older than U of T and just as busy; however it seems dingier, especially in terms of the eating arrangements. The cafeteria I ate in on campus was cheap and the food was okay but the cafe was mostly grey. I also realized how rich we are in Canada; we have heat pouring out everything in winter. Britain, although without snow, does get cool in November. However, people keep their coats on, when in pubs, malls and public places. Even homes lack warmth as small heaters take the place of central heating.

• At the main residence halls south of the university, I was basically served slop. But it was cheap. There existed a convoluted system of what you could choose (two vegetables or one soup, but no soup and only one vegetable if you got dessert). If you got the wrong combination of meal parts, supposedly someone would scream at you and take away the incorrect items.

• The student newspaper costs about $0.50 a week and is sold around campus by its staff.

Melissa enthusiastic about Tory Plans.

Madchen's 90's

par Jean-Luc Prost

Manchester est en passe de devenir l'une des scènes musicales les plus importantes des années 90. Cette ville industrielle, a déjà vu sortir de ses brumes du nord de l'Angleterre des groupes prestigieux tels que Joy Division, New Order ou les Smiths pour ne citer que les plus importants. Derrière eux arrive toute une génération de nouveaux groupes tous plus intéressants les uns que les autres et dont personne n'avait entendu parler il y a trois ou quatre ans.

Revenons tout d'abord sur New Order pour qui rien ne va plus. On ne parle pas encore de séparation, mais Peter Hook et Bernard Sumner ont fait chacun des disques solo. Le bassiste de New Order, Peter Hook, vient de créer un nouveau groupe Revenge et a sorti un single Seven Years After. Quant à Bernard Sumner il s'est associé à Johnny Marr, ex-bassist des Smiths, et Neil Tennant des Pet Shop Boys pour former un groupe qui a pour nom Electronic, qui vient de sortir un single Getting Away With It. Mais en fin de compte, ces deux tentatives sont loin d'être aussi bonnes que New Order.

En ce qui concerne les nouveaux, un groupe se détache nettement de tous les autres et vient de recevoir tous les honneurs de la presse musicale anglaise. Ce sont les Stone Roses dont le premier album est en tout point remarquable. Le New Musical Express n'hésite pas à leur donner le titre de meilleur groupe de l'année 1989 et d'attribuer les trois meilleurs places de leur classement des meilleurs singles de l'année à Made of Stone, She Bangs the Drums et Fool's Gold. Un groupe à surveiller de près donc.

Aux côtés des Stone Roses on trouve un autre groupe de Manchester qui fait de plus en plus parler de lui : Happy Mondays. Ils sont déjà notoirement célèbres pour avoir sème pas mal d'agitation à la Hacienda, un club de Manchester qui appartiennent conjointement à New Order et à leur maison de disque Factory Records. On entend aussi beaucoup parler d'un autre groupe qui possède de nombreuses qualités, Inspiral Carpets. Ils n'ont pas encore sorti d'album mais cela ne saurait tarder, en attendant on peut toujours se délecter sur leur excellent single qui est très prometteur Move.

Voici tout un brochette de nouveaux groupes qui redonnt un peu d'espoir en ce qui concerne les orientations musicales des années 90, car entre les ravages du petit lapin swingueur de Joe Bunny et ceux de la house music qui s'enfonce de plus en plus dans l'acid et l'éternel retour des paps du rock, on en était arrivé à entrevoir un avenir un peu sombre pour le rock.

Referendum Board sets election dates

by Geoff Martin

Students will vote on referendum at the same time as regular student elections (March 6 and 7), the Board of Referendum Commissioners has recently decided.

"Not many students know about us yet, but the existence of the Board of Referendum Commissioners enhances student power at York," says the current chairperson, Geoff Martin.

Martin, a graduate student in political science, is one of seven members of the new university committee that regulates the formation of representative student governments and the activity fees that students pay.

"The Board was created in the spring of 1989 as part of a bargain that gave students some control over their activity fees, in exchange for the formation of the Board to ensure that referenda are conducted fairly," he says.

This means that whether a representative student government is considered legitimate is determined by a democratic vote of the affected students and the same students will also regulate the activity fees that they pay to these organizations, he says.

The Board is only in the first year of operations but it has been busy. In addition to the high-profile health care referendum, the Board has also approved three other referenda.

Education students voted to recognize the Faculty of Education Students' Association as their faculty-level student government, Glendon students voted to increase their contributions to the newspaper Pro Tem and also to increase their support for Theatre Glendon.

"The Board has also been busy establishing its own procedures, which included appointing a Secretary and Treasurer from our ranks, as well as Chief Returning Officer," Martin says.

Cathy Clarke, Assistant Director of the Office of Student Affairs, is the Secretary and was appointed by the Provost and is the only non-student of the seven-member Board.

Movie cameras roll

While Glendon students were at the pub or at home 'hitting the books' on Thursday, January 25, members of the motion picture industry were utilizing the lower parking lot and hill up to Post Rd. to shoot an upcoming movie.

At 11:00pm, as the Glendon Escort Service was on its way out of the lower parking lot, it was stopped by a police officer and a member of the film crew who were controlling any traffic going up and down the hill.

Wrapping up life

by Paul Lee

If you have walked around Glendon campus lately and noticed that some trees were wrapped in tape, you might have asked yourself if they were diseased or on the verge of death. But rest assured - the wrapping was all for a good cause.

Glendon Gallery presents Charlotte Lindgren's Winter Wraps. She has three exhibition sites on Campus, as well as photographs displayed in Glendon Gallery.

In describing this approach to art, Lindgren said, "It's not the actual physical wrapping that is incorporated as art; it is the conservation of life which is symbolic and spiritual."

Lindgren's motive is an informed love of nature and the form's relationship with the environment. Her photographs are perceived as sculptures caught in a particular perspective at a particular moment in time.

Although wrapping trees is not quite to my taste in Art, after walking the trees, I became more conscious of the strange new forms and realized that their purpose is to protect and to preserve nature. But where indeed is the Art? Perhaps it just escaped me that, even in the season of winter, both art and life are alive below the snow line. The Lingren exhibit closes February 9, 1990.

Video cameras roll

The member of the crew said the movie was a suspense thriller featuring stars Christopher Plummer (The Sound of Music) and Heathert Thomas (The Fall Girl) among others.

The cameras, lights and film crew were all set up and ready to roll. A long white cloth limousine waited on the side of the road until the actors were cured.

Keep an eye out for a movie with these stars and if you see it, watch for the scene on "our hill!"

The photo accompanying the review of Norman Lum Tam at La Maison de la Culture last issue should have been credited to Kerry Hobbes of the Glendon Gallery.

Cabaret - Cabaret - Cabaret - Cabaret

Carnival Cabaret: Gerald Pili on the sax (and Maurice Cohen on the bongos).

Oat Bran hype

by Naomlee Fook

It was loud, it was obnoxious sometimes and it was cheap - that was the scene at this year's Cabaret. I don't think I should review the Carnival Acts - after all, I'm sure everyone knows what happened, thanks to the Glendon Gossip Trees.

The biggest complaint about the Oat Bran Cabaret was that people who had bought tickets well in advance of the event were not allowed in at 9pm or even by 10pm. This was due to poor spatial planning - I really cannot see how Theatre Glen­ don could hold 250 people, even for a dance, much less a Cabaret.

Highlights of the evening, performance-wise, included Stef Caunter and "Georgette's" duet (which was auditorially ob­ scured by the sound technician), the Trait d'Union Improvisation group (which could not be heard due to the audience's constant clamour during their act), the acoustic songs of Lynn, Mike and Norbert, the beautiful rendition of Blue Moon by Becky, and - always a crowd favourite - the band with Maurice on the bongos.

Low points of the evening, aside from overcrowding and the generally poor organization of the Cabaret (which emcees Lars and Mike did their best to hide) were the poetry readings - and not just the reader who was the "innocent" victim of reading poems that were not hers.

The reaction of the crowd was mixed - possibly due to the fact that most of those in attendance were non-Glendon students. After talking with Glendon students, they pretty much had the same reaction as myself - the Cabaret was, trying to imitate., but never was able to duplicate., the emotions created by Cabarets past.

Miscommunication concerning tickets

by Annabelle Tullis-Barr, Technical Director, Theatre Glendon

I feel compelled in some ways to talk to the College Community at large regarding some of the problems of last Tuesday's Cabaret. Miscom­ munication and mismanage­ ment resulted in overselling at the door (I have heard ridicu­ lously inflated numbers being bandied about: please, if you want numbers, come talk to me!). The result was lots of angry and frustrated people at the door, tickets in hand, who could not get into the Cabaret. I talked to patrons, refunded money and tried to make an unfriendly atmosphere bearable.

All of the people who stayed were allowed in later, as the crowd began to thin out. Some of the people that received a refund for their ticket were allowed in later too. I got a very real taste of what the Pub staff have to put up with on a regular basis: rudeness, arro­ gance, threats and petulant sulking when it is found that they require photo I.D. at the door. (Folks, I can understand, though not necessarily condone, when people "lose it" under those conditions. Nobody likes playing the "heavy"). I have since heard a rash of complaints, angry words that point out mistakes but offer no solutions.

Paul Pascolo, Maurice Cohen and their friends worked hard to produce an event that tried to provide for everyone here at Glendon and for the students from York Main as well. I believe that their suc­ cesses outweigh their failures.

The Cabaret is over; we'll move on to planning other events and let this one go.

Thanks to the Pub Staff (poor Dan!), Student Security and all those who stayed behind to lug tables and chairs and help clean up. Thanks to all those who attended and a heart­ felt apology to those who were turned away!

Paul sings his heart out.

SPORTS

Men's Volleyball: Glendon well-represented

by Stéphane Dion

De nouveau cette année, le Collège Glendon était représenté au tournoi de volleyball masculin disputé entre les différents Collèges de l'université. The 1990 Glendon volleyball roster was the most talented Glendon has ever had. Three first-year students were added to the list of veteran players, a serious contender for the title.

Les joueurs de l'édition 1990 étaient: Blair Spriggs, Geoff Bowby, Eric Wilcock, Bassam Abou-Naim, Pascal Forget, Louis Deroschers et Stéphane Dion. Ce noyau de joueurs aurait dû, à mon avis, leur permettre de se hisser au sommet du classement, même si l'équipe n'avait pas eu l'occasion de pratiquer très souvent avant le tournoi.

The first two games of the year were lost to Bethune College. The 11-2 and 11-5 losses were caused by a lack of effort, speed and encouragement on the part of the players. Games three and four against Stong College were not any better. Although Stong College beat Glendon twice (11-5 and 11-6), Glendon's performance was more encouraging. Again, a lack of constant effort and team spirit caused these losses. Had Glendon tried harder and shown stronger team spirit, it could have beaten Stong and Bethune, which were ranked first and second. Le même scénario se poursuivait tout au long du tournoi. Ce n'est pas un manque d'habileté mais plutôt le manque d'entrain au jeu qui causa leurs défaîtes. Ainsi, ils ont dû s'incliner deux fois contre Winters College (11-5, 11-8) et contre B.B.A. (11-5, 11-9) avant de sauver leur première victoire.

As the tournament went on, Glendon's performance got better and better; as a result, they finally won a game. Geoff Bowby, the setter and best player of the tournament led the team to a victory against Winters College with a score of 11-2, but unfortunately they lost the second game to Winters 11-8.

Glendon played the last two games against McLaughlin College, which was ranked third. Although winning one game 11-5 and losing the other one 11-7, Glendon's team finally realized that good results were possible with constant effort and team spirit.

Basketball travel problem

by Lori Harris

In light of all the recent negative comments about Glendon Athletics, it should be noted that the Glendon women's basketball team did very well this year. Although not consistent, they showed enthusiasm and commitment in their playing. Despite the fact that the team usually relied on the TTC to get to games, they only defaulted once, due to bad directions and not lack of effort.

The team finished the season in sixth place out of nine teams in all. They lost to Bethune, the third-place team in the first round of the play-offs, again showing lots of team spirit.
