CAMBRIDGE - A Toronto couple's 28 year marriage came to an end when her husband found out that she had been having an affair with a three foot rat for over a year. When he confronted the two outside the rat's love nest, the rodent took refuge in a nearby sewer.

Co-worker's at the lab where the rat works confirm that the two had been seeing each other. "The affair started taking place in his cage where she would visit him. Then they went to the sewers, and finally this weekend they took a cruise together. He's a two-bit rat." says Mike, a lab worker. 'Bits' are a measurement of viscosity. "It's the slimy-ness factor, and giving him a 2 is an understatement!" said another co-worker, who wishes to remain anonymous.

The woman had been hiding the affair from her family, for fears that they would hold it against her. The delusional dame said that "...the whole thing just kind of started.

It was out of my control...then it just snowballed. But people make mistakes, nobody's perfect."

The new couple are not planning to have any offspring, as the woman is "...getting past that age." The husband and his two sons are planning to start an extermination business.

PM'S PAST PRIMES HIM FOR

An ex co-worker of Canada's Prime Minister, Jean Chretien, has stated that the PM deserved more than a pie in the face and that he has forgotten his roots.

During the summer the Prime Minister, while visiting Prince Edward Island, Canada's smallest province, was met with a cream pie in the face. The assailant, a 24 year old, from the small island said he did it because he was against Chretien giving large contributions to companies.

However, John Christian of Shawinigan, Quebec - Chretien's home riding - believes that the PM deserved more than that, and that the actions of the young man were not enough.

"I work with Jean when we, how you say, young men at the bakery," said Christian.

At the age of fifteen, while attending high school, the then young PM, had taken a job at the Petite Pie Shop, in his home riding, said a source close to Christian. The job was an after school part time duty and where Christian first befriended Chretien.

"I make pie," said Christian. "Jean, he clean the shop and sometime he help me make pie."

Chretien was a hard worker, added Christian; however, after the school term had ended he was offered a fulltime position and refused it, Christian stated

"He say I do not make pie forever. I better than that."

When the incident in PEI happened, Christian said that Chretien made absolutely no reference to his former days at the pie shop. "I voted for him as I always did, but not again. Jean has become rich and powerful and he has forgotten people like me."

John Christian tells all about the P.M....

a WHALE...

...OF A DATE

A killer whale has fallen head over fins in love with a Norwegian ferryboat, reported the U.S CoastGuard boat Voksa, has named the whale Bertha. According to a noted marine biologist, the love-struck whale is probably a seven-year old female.

The 13-ton black-and-white whale has been tagging alongside the white-and-black 150-foot ferryboat as it lumbers its way to and from the many islands basked off in the west coast of Norway.

After courting the ferryboat though its daily trips, Bertha would follow it back to port where she'd continue to rub up against Voksa's cold steel hull. Later she'd roll over on her back and allow water pumped from the boat to splash on her belly.

"Oh, god," said one German tourist on seeing the whale. "It has

MEDICAL MIRACLE

A nail accidentally fired from a nail gun, slamming into the skull of a carpenter and nailing his cap to his head." I've had worse headaches," says the Duluth, Minnesota man.

"I didn't actually feel the damn thing go in there. I heard the gun go off. Later I tried to take my hat off but it wouldn't come off. Then I knew [the nail] had gone in."

The accident occurred when a nail gun-toting co-worker's arm hit the carpenter's head. The gun fired, with 120 pounds of air pressure driving an eight-penny galvanized nail through the carpenter's baseball cap and into his skull. The doctor who removed the nail said he shouldn't suffer any serious side effects, the usual vomiting and diarrhoea.

"If he were to pick a perfect place to put a nail in, he was right on."

To many people, Glendon College has always served as a peaceful refuge for wild animals and nature lovers. However, to others it is nothing but a convenient dumping ground for debris and waste.

Last spring, Jill saw that one of the houses at the north end of the valley, located on Park Lane Circle, had begun a substantial construction project. In the ensuing weeks, she observed that the trail below the house and surrounding forest area was becoming significantly damaged as a result of the construction work.

"I was walking the ridge," she added as she showed me the damaged area "when a front loader pushed dirt and rocks over the edge of the property. The dirt slid a significant distance down the hill while several large rocks rolled down and onto the trail where both the dog and I were walking at the time. The operator was totally oblivious to the fact that anyone was on the trail and proceeded to push more dirt over the edge."

That evening, Jill returned to the area and noticed that the hill was covered in excess soil and that the trees near the property had "several feet of dirt piled against their trunks". She also saw that a flexible pipe had been set up from the house and down the hill for water drainage. Consequently, since then the ridge has become riddled with deep trenches from the runoff of water, and the excess dirt that slid down the hill has covered all sorts of ground plants and collected against trees.

Thoroughly annoyed and angered by the homeowners' complete disregard for his surrounding environment, Jill promptly called Glendon College to see if they were aware of the situation. After inspecting the trail and seeing the damage done, Glendon staff contacted the Metro Toronto Conservation Authority (MTCA).

The MTCA proceeded by contacting the resident of the Park Lane Circle home for questioning. The homeowner denied all responsibility for the condition of the ridge. He claims that all the dirt, rocks, erosion, etc. are an "act of God" and that the flexible drainpipe that runs down the hill has been there "for years".

Furthermore, the MTCA discovered that the homeowner failed to obtain a building permit for what was supposed to be the construction of a swimming pool.

The MTCA is now gathering evidence to prosecute the homeowner and Jill has been called upon as a witness. Hopefully the truth will surface. Whatever the verdict, it is essential that people like Jill continue to play an active role in protecting the beloved Glendon valley, which will only continue to grow in its majesty as the urbanization of Toronto escalates.

Dear Editor,
I of all people never thought I'd be writing to you, especially not about an experience like this. Let's just say it was the most erotic and satisfying moment of my life!

It happened just before Valentine's Day. I was looking for a surprise for my boyfriend, and some cherry-red lingerie seemed like just what our mediocre love life needed. After visiting the usual La Senza, and Silk & Satin, I happened upon a small, yet alluring boutique- little did I know just how alluring it would be!

As soon as I entered the shop I knew that this was the right place. I was instantly overcome by the store's leather and lace. Just walking among the racks, running my fingers through the silky satin, began to arouse me. Everything around me- the music, the lighting- contributed to the effect. If only there were someone to share it with me...

Suddenly there was a voice from behind: "May I help you?" Startled, I whirled around, and before me stood a woman whom I found surprisingly attractive. Again she asked, "Is there anything I can do for you?" I told her I was just looking for the hottest item in the store. She grinned knowingly and said she had just the thing- I would soon find out that the hottest item was neither satin nor lace. She picked up a skimpy item and vanished behind the velvet curtain. While waiting I glanced around the shop and noticed the lights at the front of the store had been dimmed, and the "closed" sign was perched in the window. It seemed like an eternity before the curtain opened, revealing that beautifully sensuous woman, clad only in a red leather teddy and four-inch spiked heels. Never in my wildest dreams did I imagine that a woman could be so arousing. All I could was stare at her perfectly sculptured tanned body.

"Do you like what you see?" 'Yes!' was my answer, but I wasn't speaking of the lingerie. I was simply mesmerized by her inviting lips and succulent breasts. I felt myself dripping with excitement. As she moved toward me, her erect nipples informed me that my lust was not misplaced. I stood there paralysed as she silently began to unbutton my blouse. Time stood still as her talented fingers worked quickly and nimbly to remove all but my undies - and my lust.

I was overwhelmed by an incredible desire to touch her. With hands that were no longer than my own, I gently caressed her heaving breasts. I slowly worked my way down her quivering sweaty stomach until I reached her patch of paradise. She kicked back her head and a slight moan fell from her lips as I vigorously massaged her clit through her now-sopping lace.

Suddenly, she grasped my hand and, raising it to her lips, licked it clean. Placing one hand behind my neck, she pulled me close. I felt her other trembling hand slide inside my panties, and begin to lightly tantalize my aching clit. I was brought to my knees by massive sexual desire.

She moved up between my legs, as if she were a jungle cat stalking some prey. Then she sucked my love bean so hard that I felt I'd explode if I didn't shriek with ecstasy. And explode I did into the most violent orgasm of my life! My squeals of joy eventually dwindled into whimpers of contentment.

The rest of the evening was like a dream. The next thing I remember, we were dressed. As I left the shop, the succulent sales lady gave me a brand-new hot-red teddy, and said, "Because you're special it's 25% off." I've been going back for more "lingerie" ever since. Money really does buy you happiness.

HIGH TUITION FEES TO TURN TRICKS

High tuition fees have been forcing some students to turn tricks at class, says a source at York University's Student Affairs.

While studying Political Science at Glendon College, Beth, a second year student, has turned to the streets as a source of income for school.

"Classes are almost $900 a year. I can't afford that," she said outside her residence in midtown Toronto.

Most of the people she caters to are wealthy university educated businessmen and some are even students, said the busy 19 year old.

"I'm attractive. I've definitely had offers in class or at the campus pub."

York University's tuition has been increasing rapidly over the last five years. Government cutbacks and a greedy administration are believed to be responsible for forcing many students at York to find more than one job. However, Beth finds that her job is ideal.

HIGH TUITION FORCES STUDENTS TO TURN TRICKS...

High tuition fees have been forcing some students to turn tricks after class, says a source at York University's Student Affairs.

York University's tuition has been increasing rapidly over the last five years. Government cutbacks and a greedy administration are believed to be responsible for forcing many students at York to find more than one job. However, Beth finds that her job is ideal.

"I meet them and do what they desire and then go home and do my sociology homework. It works well for both of us."

A source within the University says that they cannot control what their students are doing outside of the school. "We can only hope that someone is not going to enter that type of work. But they are adults," said the source.

Glendon College has 1200 students and many of them are from outside of Canada, travelling on visas from other Universities. "A lot of our students are not from here. Their countries have different ways and practices. What's right in Cambodia may not be right in Canada. It's a big world," added the source.

The fact that so many of the students at Glendon College are from other countries means, according to the Canadian government, that they cannot legally work in Canada. This has forced students to find other sources of income and those mostly under the table.

"I was born in the States," said Beth. "I couldn't get work in Canada and have been forced by York onto the streets."

Survivor Sequel Seeks Suicide!

...emphasis on the killing of contestants...

In a document leaked by Fox Network, The Pro Tem has learned where they plan to stage the next Survivor series. According to a document signed by Fox' president, Fox is considering, among others, the following scenarios: Holding it in a deserted African plain surrounded by a pack of lions and a tribe of cannibals. Instead of getting cast-off the losing contestants get to be banished to either the territory of the lions or the tribe. "It'll make Saving Private Ryan look like Casablanca," said Fox spokesperson. Fox is also considering a less exotic possibility, holding it in a high school. The contestants get to play the role of a popular clique. This clique gets to mercilessly torment those it deems inferior until they snap and bring their father's shotgun to school. The contestants then run for their lives around the school. "This scenario," said Fox, "is to be heavily endorsed by the NRA head executioner Mr. "Moses" Heston.

When asked why there was so much emphasis on the killing of the contestants, the Fox official replied: "Well, it wouldn't be fair to call the show Survivor if their lives are never in danger. I think it will make these shows interesting. I mean they're fighting for more than just their egos and a million bucks. They'd actually be fighting for their lives."

THE REAL KEY TO FINDING THE RIGHT JOB...

Felony Foils Fledgling Affair

A failed attempt to blackmail Principal Kenneth McRoberts has resulted in the break-up of a love affair between two Glendon students, says a residence don.

thing they did.” After a recent valentine’s day dinner, sources claim, the two sweethearts walked into McRoberts’ office to ask for a quick graduation because they were planning to move to the Greek island of Lesbos. When the Principal denied their request, they tried to strong-arm him into it by threatening to take away Quebec’s recognition of Glendon as a bilingual college.

“He was furious. He kicked them out only 10 minutes after they came in. I never saw Mr. McRoberts so angry,” a source within the Principal’s office said.

Friends say how afterwards the two grew increasingly apart. Poultry is said to have sought a job with the government, while break-up led Jasper to a financial demise and frequent trips outside the country.

“He has found a way to grow out of this,” close friends say. “We’re helping him get away from it all,” tell his parents.

“It’s terrible to see their love fade away like that,” added residence don, “The Administration has no heart.”

Although Kenneth McRoberts had no comment on this event, sources say jealousy led him to break-up the happy couple.

Fourth year students Michael Poultry, of Washington DC, and Ian Jasper, of Vancouver, enjoyed a romantic and business partnership unlike any other. “I always saw them together,” says friend, “they were inseparable in every-

Bawden, LaFlamme Clash For Top Spot!

Sean Bawden and Ryan LaFlamme will be fighting for more than the presidency in this coming election. The two candidates were once best friends, said pals, and it was a friendship that was broken up due to lying, cheating and now the quest for power.

"They used to hang out a lot. I think they've shared beer and stuff," said Ines Pirslin, LaFlamme's girlfriend.

Pollsters at Glendon are predicting a tight race and one that will come down to a possible recount.

"They both have a lot of inside push," said a source at the GCSU. "It will be close."

Bawden and LaFlamme used to share a basement apartment in the Toronto area earlier in the year. However, the relationship fell apart when Bawden and LaFlamme were seen outside of the house fighting and screaming one night.

"They were yelling about bills and girlfriends," said a neighbour in the area. "One of them called the other one lazy."

Now both are running for the top spot in the Glendon election.

"I think it will be a tough decision," said Tony a Glendon Student. "Knowing that they used to be buddies, makes it a lot harder."

WHO THE
ARE!

Health Canada Driver - Crackdown

OTTAWA - Health Canada is aiming its Ptouch Label Maker at the automotive industry in its latest bid to lower the number of preventable deaths in Canada, say government insiders. In the wake of its hugely successful campaign to curb smoking with tough tobacco warning labels, Health Canada is now drawing up plans to splash new labels on all licensed Canadian motor vehicles. While sources insist that the program is still in the early stages of development, information leaked to Pro Tem reveals the proposed warnings-

- Use graphic depictions of car crashes to convey the perils of driving
- Play on Parents fears of losing a child
- Encourage alternative modes of Transportation, mainly public transit
- Will require placement in highly visible areas both inside and outside the vehicle

"These warnings are going to be phased in over six years so that there will be less resistance to them", says one source within Health Canada. "They're going to start with text messages similar to the ones we now have on side view mirrors and gradually increase the strength of the wording and add pictures to increase the warnings' effectiveness.

While the public may be lulled into complying with the new rules, insiders fear that the new proposal may never even get close to becoming law. "Car crashes may be the Nations #3 killer, but there is no way the automotive industry is going to be taking this lying down," says the insider. "They're going to squash it before it even gets out of the starting gate."

But there may be light at the end of the tunnel for the new proposal from an unexpected ally, the Liquor Industry. "We've always felt that Alcohol has gotten the short end of the stick in the Drinking and Driving issue," says industry spokesperson David Donaldson, "We are going to show a real commitment to this constructive legislation and hope it will clear up the issue of who the real killers are"

*NSYNC IS *NTOWN I

Teen Hearthrob Party-Crazy-- and that's what the girls love about him!!

There have been several *NSYNC spottings over the past couple of weeks - a Raptors game here, a shopping center there - all of which are 100% true. Band members Joey Fatone and Lance Bass (pronounced like the fish) are in town filming a movie. (Backstreet Boy, Kevin Richardson, was supposed to star in the film as well but Fatone and Bass saw to it that this did not happen.)

On Saturday, March 31, both boys attended the elite nightclub "This Is London" with fellow band mate Chris Kirkpatrick and actor Johnny Depp. An inside source told Pro Tem that while Bass, Kirkpatrick and Depp mostly downplayed their appearance, Fatone was "partying mad crazy." He was allegedly pinching any and every girl in sight, using cheesy pickup lines and acting like an all around sleaze.

A close friend of the family says that Joey has learned his bad social skills from his older brother who has often been spotted frequenting cheap hotels with underage girls, promising them a chance to meet the popular band. *NSYNC management is not at all worried about how Fatone's behaviour will affect the band's clean cut image. "He's girl crazy," says co-producer Max Valentino, "that's what the girls love about him."

PORCINE PARATROOPERS POACH POLIS

"They ate my dog!"

A pack of terrorist pigs have invaded a small community of northern Texas and are attacking real people.

"I thought it was a joke," said one resident. "My husband told me and I was like, what should we do?"

The Pigs have been murdering small dogs and chickens, vandalizing lawns and gardens, and destroying water lines.

"One resident was attacked by a 400-pound sow just one block away from where the animal-control station is," said officer Osborne of the Texas State Troopers.

The pigs had, according to sources, been living outside the small Texas town. They had threatened many times during the year to attack, but never did.

One frightened resident told reporters "I know they ate my dog and my sister's dog, and they're driving her crazy. We're always fighting these hogs. They're everywhere. You either have to stay at home, or carry a machete." Residents have also claimed that after killing the pet dogs, the pigs came back to eat the carcasses.

Bunker Burning A Hoax!

The people have been lied to for too long. History books would have us believing that Adolf Hitler died in the spring of 1945. Historians tell us that Hitler and his new bride Eva Braun took their own lives. They would also have us believe that Hitler and Eva were cremated inside his bunker - thus excusing the impossibility of identifying the corpses.

However, Jen Sheehy, a Glendon International Studies student, has uncovered the truth of Hitler.

Being of Italian descent, Jenn has made annual vacations to her birth town of Venice, Italy. This year, upon her return, she was shocked by what she saw in one of her photos. Standing at the docks of the local gondolier's was the monster himself, Adolf Hitler. "I couldn't believe it," said Jenn of her discovery.

Even more frightening than the fact that Hitler is alive, is the realization that he hasn't aged a day. This led Jenn to speculate that he might, in fact, be a vampire. "Like, there's no way that he could look like that if he wasn't one, you know?"

Jenn's discovery has brought to light a puzzling next problem. If Hitler is still alive, who died in the bunker on that fateful spring day in 1945?

Hopefully Jenn's discovery will help speed up the process of uncovering the truth.

Looking Forward to Old Time Values

To hit or not to hit?

There are too many people these days on the buses and subway trains with strollers.

A few days ago I saw this one woman who looked like she was on the verge of a nervous breakdown. She was at the point where she was actually pleading with her child to stop fooling around. She was actually begging this child to stop, but the kid was relentless.

Now, I don't know where this mother was trained in the art of mothering a child, but she went to the wrong damn school. I don't know about most of you, but I was hit as a child. Some call it discipline, others call it child abuse. I call it keeping your kid in line.

Not beating the crap out of your child, but having them act in a presentable manner in public. I know if I was about 5 years old, walkin' around, puttin' everything in my mouth, pickin' garbage off the ground, seeing how far I could wedge my finger in my nose, I would have received the most sizzling hand to my rear-end.

This has been burned into my mind and some may still call it child abuse, but I call it responsible parenting. I personally think I turned out fine (some people may not think so, but then again they deserve a slap). When I saw that kid having the power over her mom it made me realize where the control was, it was with the child, not with the parent. That mother had been worn down so much that she just gave in to the child, in the same manner a cult would wear down a human being, this child was becoming Jim Jones, takin' control of someone, to bend to their will.

To hit or not to hit? I want my kids to grow up happy, I'll show them as much love as they need, but at some point in time they're gonna fall out of line, they're gonna say somethin' or do somethin' that won't warrant a scoldin', but a slap (not a punch or a kick, but a slap), somethin' so that they can recognize that they've done something wrong and should correct it for the next time. The manners of a parent seem to be passed down to the child, the way I see it if the parent acts in a courteous, respectful manner, the child will too.

MEGAMAN MYSTIFIES !?

GLENDON- The remains of a giant human skeleton on the Glendon campus have experts baffled. The giant bones are being excavated and investigated for authenticity, but so far they appear to be the real deal.

A group of students wandering through the campus woods discovered the remains, which consisted of a skull with a circumference of over four feet wide! More digging on the site revealed the rest of the almost complete skeleton.

"This completely upsets our fossil record and everything we thought we knew about human history and evolution."

Says Rick Cheeney, head of the research team. "I mean, this was a big man, he would have been around 25 feet tall. Seeing at his eye level would be like walking a tightrope. You wouldn't even be able to hear the people down below."

The students' startling discovery has irked some residents of the campus. "I just feel more comfortable knowing that this man who could stand over us is dead. Imagine him in a marketplace, what a disturbance and threat that would create!" said Nelly Black, one concerned student. "Thank God the superman is dead."

Castro Pissed After Trade Invitation Revoked

Some say he didn't want to go. But the reality is that he just wasn't invited.

"He was foaming at the mouth."
-Jimmy Carter

After having his invitation revoked to the Summit of the Americas in Quebec City this month, Fidel Castro was seen drinking heavily and yelling at an empty parking lot.

"He was standing on his podium at the revolution plaza and screaming obscenities," said a Canadian Tourist.

The Summit of Americas will be plotting a Trade agreement throughout the Western Hemisphere later this month. However, of the thirty something countries involved, Cuba will not be one of them.

"He was saying stuff, crazy stuff," said the tourist. "Things like Free Trade is a good thing and free trade allows business to prosper."

For the last few months, there have been upwards of 500 CEO's pouring over trade documents as well as regular meetings in Miami with over 900 trade negotiators planning for the event. "I feel left out, where are my friends?" the tourist believes Castro stated.

Although the parking lot was empty, the tourist claims that this did not defeat the revolutionary. "When he was finished he took a sip and slowly staggered away, followed by his entourage. I kinda of felt bad for him."

Canada's government has heavily guarded Quebec City for the meeting; however, sources in Canada say that if Castro does show up, he will not be treated like a protestor. "He like to drink, everyone know that," said Prime Minister Chretien. "I think he a party crasher and nobody want that."

MANGLED IN THE MOON!

American Government Criminal Conspiracy

Make no bones about it: America's Apollo 11 lunar module photographed a human skeleton on the moon in 1969! Since then, according to a top Chinese astrophysicist, the U.S government has kept this astonishing picture under wraps until recently, when an unnamed source gave a startling outer-space photo to the astrophysicist for release. This photo mysteriously appeared on the November 14th issue of Pro Tem. "The Americans have conspired in a cover-up of monumental and possibly even criminal proportions," claims the astrophysicist. This amazing photograph clearly reveals a human skeleton on the moon's surface. As if that weren't enough, the skeleton appears to have been wearing jeans. The position of the bones also suggests that the person was at least partially dismembered and met with a violent death.

The Chinese astrophysicist believes that the skeleton was transported into space long after the person was killed, since bone and flesh could not decompose in the airless atmosphere of the moon.

"The question that must be answered is how the skeleton got to the moon," says the astrophysicist. "The obvious implication is that extraterrestrial life-forms were involved, but we'll never know unless the Americans release all the information they have."
