Pres. commission to investigate Glendon

By DEBORAH WOLFE

David W. Slater, president of York University, has set up a task force on the future of Glendon College.

The committee was set up after the first year enrollment this year. A report from Slater's desk expresses doubt about the financial security of Glendon.

Within the next six weeks the five member task force must "devise a plan for Glendon, the first stages of which must be operational for the 1971-72 session."

The task force is made up of Glendon principal Albert Tucker, English professor Richard Bots, three professors from the main York campus. They are Harold Kaplan, William Read and J. Warkentin.

Included in the president's report is the idea that "the task force could be expanded to include 1600 to 1650 full-time students without loss of its small scale character and with the prospect of continuing high academic quality."

The forum charges the task force with involving all members of the York community in its efforts. "An adequate opportunity should be provided for students' organizations concerned with Glendon," the president suggested, as well as by individual students and those responsible for various student activities to voice their opinions.

The forum, a weekend of events organized to attract students from Glendon and the York community, was also called upon to "report progress to the task force as soon as possible, and not later than October 16th.

"It is important that the task force receive not only opinion on the problems of the dozirability and feasibility of proposed courses of action," says the report. "Some students have voiced concern over the fact that no student is sitting on the task force. They have voiced the fear that in a few years, if Glendon does not achieve Slater's goal of 1,800 students, that the college will become a faculty of arts and science college, - with no particular ethos, goal, or aim."

The task force, in making plans for Glendon, should consider several points, the report states. It must be recognized that bilingual and bicultural concepts are developing slowly in Ontario and in Canada, although there are uncertainties concerning the scaling, timing, and focus of the support which will be made to such programs by the government, the report said.

The report also urges the committee to attract students to Glendon to study "many of whom are not enrolled in Glendon programmes, but in the faculty of arts from the main campus."

"Recruitment, which has been cancelled at the last minute, is expected to begin next month," the report said. "Glendon's inception of 1967 has been the major blight of the college's short history. Yet, as Slater makes quite clear, he wishes to see Glendon hit a peak of 1,800."

The residents when full, hold a maximum of 500 students - including the base­

More debts pile on council

By CLAIRE ELLARD

Dave Phillips, student council president, has resigned in order to take charge of the Glendon forum to be held this October.

At a student council meeting Sept. 10, Phillips announced his intentions to resign as he felt unable to fulfill his duties as president of the council properly. "I've held a full-time job outside the college but I claimed that his new job on the forum would require less time on campus."

The forum, a weekend of discussions, art exhibits, and speakers, will deal with the problems of under enrollment at Glendon, and was also called upon to "report progress to the task force as soon as possible, and not later than October 16th."

"It is important that the task force receive not only opinion on the problems of the dozirability and feasibility of proposed courses of action," says the report. "Some students have voiced concern over the fact that no student is sitting on the task force. They have voiced the fear that in a few years, if Glendon does not achieve Slater's goal of 1,800 students, that the college will become a faculty of arts and science college, - with no particular ethos, goal, or aim."

The task force, in making plans for Glendon, should consider several points, the report states. It must be recognized that bilingual and bicultural concepts are developing slowly in Ontario and in Canada, although there are uncertainties concerning the scaling, timing, and focus of the support which will be made to such programs by the government, the report said.

The report also urges the committee to attract students to Glendon to study "many of whom are not enrolled in Glendon programmes, but in the faculty of arts from the main campus."

"Recruitment, which has been cancelled at the last minute, is expected to begin next month," the report said. "Glendon's inception of 1967 has been the major blight of the college's short history. Yet, as Slater makes quite clear, he wishes to see Glendon hit a peak of 1,800."

The residents when full, hold a maximum of 500 students - including the base­

The forum charges the task force with involving all members of the York community in its efforts. "An adequate opportunity should be provided for students' organizations concerned with Glendon," the president suggested, as well as by individual students and those responsible for various student activities to voice their opinions.

The forum, a weekend of events organized to attract students from Glendon and the York community, was also called upon to "report progress to the task force as soon as possible, and not later than October 16th."

"It is important that the task force receive not only opinion on the problems of the dozirability and feasibility of proposed courses of action," says the report. "Some students have voiced concern over the fact that no student is sitting on the task force. They have voiced the fear that in a few years, if Glendon does not achieve Slater's goal of 1,800 students, that the college will become a faculty of arts and science college, - with no particular ethos, goal, or aim."

The task force, in making plans for Glendon, should consider several points, the report states. It must be recognized that bilingual and bicultural concepts are developing slowly in Ontario and in Canada, although there are uncertainties concerning the scaling, timing, and focus of the support which will be made to such programs by the government, the report said.

The report also urges the committee to attract students to Glendon to study "many of whom are not enrolled in Glendon programmes, but in the faculty of arts from the main campus."

"Recruitment, which has been cancelled at the last minute, is expected to begin next month," the report said. "Glendon's inception of 1967 has been the major blight of the college's short history. Yet, as Slater makes quite clear, he wishes to see Glendon hit a peak of 1,800."

The residents when full, hold a maximum of 500 students - including the base­
The Entrance is New

The book selection is new!
and clean, and interesting.
The people are new!
interested and knowledgeable.
The layout is new!

More room for BROWSING
More room for BOOKS
More room for SUPPLIES

Much of the supplies stock is on SALE!
The texts are here (most of them)
- at 5% cash discount!
CHARGE ACCOUNTS ARE WELCOME! No fees.
No interest.

The new-faced GLENDON COLLEGE BOOKSTORE
"I see life as a card game. I don't think Chip Oliver got a full deck." The quote belongs to Dan Connors, the head coach of the Oakland Raiders, and he was reacting to his retirement of linebacker Jack Connors, who for years had been a cornerstone of the team's defense.

Most people reacted that way, with an air of disappointment, but a few gave Chip Oliver credit for helping them reach their potential. He mentored them, taught them how to think, and challenge them to face their fears and failures.

Chip Oliver is just one of the many coaches who have turned college football into a world of opportunity for young men. They teach that virtue and honesty are not just a part of life, but a way of living. They teach that sports are a means to an end, not an end in themselves.

By NICK MARTIN

The athletic system is geared to produce a winning elite. For, on, we'd be dead. Football's a violent game. You don't blow kisses at your opponent," rapped one Raider. Certainly pro football has to be that way, is, without a violent action it would have little appeal. And it was not the game of football which turned me off, it was the whole horizon of sports. But the whole horizon of sports opens up to you, you want to read everything about sports even if you have no interest in it. But they won't let you read the truth of America as understood by the man who's running the third-string quarterback, and Bronc Burnett, and a dozen others who are not starting because they were not good enough.

At the end of the practice, he announced that he had selected his starting first group back all morning. We were all cut. At the tender age of fourteen, because of most of our locality, we are a lot of瘦 and all a few one hundred yards, we had been weeded out. Can you be a kid and the whole horizon of sports open up to you, you want to read everything about sports even if you have no interest in it. But they won't let you read the truth of America as understood by the man who's running the third-string quarterback, and Bronc Burnett, and a dozen others who are not starting because they were not good enough.

These books lie because no one is ever cut from the team. They lie because no one is ever made of the 90% of the students at Somora High who are just as honest and virtuous and as capable of earning a paycheck as an All-American. Americans are not made for a few. Americans never meet anyone as admirable as himself, someone full of truth and virtue, never tastes defeat, never tells you that it is different or no different but you need physical recreation.
REWARD
For Information Leading To The Apprehension Of:

JESUS CHRIST
Alias: Prince of Peace, Son of God, etc.

Dresses poorly, said to be a carpenter by trade, illnourished, has visionary dreams (may be on marijuana or LSD). Usually to be found among the unemployed and vagrant. Dangerous professional agitator. A communist.

Red beard, scars on hands and feet as a result of former action taken by authorities and respectable citizens, long hair.

This man is an enemy of the state. Any citizen providing information leading to his arrest will be well rewarded.